

Both Had Eczema In Its Worst Form

After Physicians Falled, Hood's Sarsaparilla Perfectly Cured.

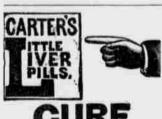

Great mental agony is endured by parents who see their children suffering from diseases caused by impure blood, and for which there seems no cure. This is turned to joy when Hood's Sarsaparilla is resorted to, for it expels the foul humors from the blood, and restores the diseased skin to fresh, healthy brightness. Read the following from grateful parents: "To C. I. Hood's Go., Lowell, Mass.: "We think Hood's Sarsaparilla is the most valuable medicine on the market for blood and in the year 1851, there lived in Pal-myra, Mo. a bright young lawyer. Left an orphan at an early age, by dint of hard work John Graves had obtained an education, passed a creditable ex-amination, was admitted to the bar, and, at the time of this story was con-sidered upon of the most recombined. sidered one of the most promising young men of the place. Industrious, reliable, soler, he was possessed of one of those intellects that are not only brilliant, but full of solid information

In the stirring times of '01 and '62, Graves had not enlisted, because of the guerrilla warfare carried on in the state, making it necessary for some to stay at home to guard the women and children.

The horrors of war cannot be de-scribed. One of the chiefest among them is that irregular warfare for which neither side is responsible, but which is so terrible to any country harassed by it. In Palmyra there lived one Taylor, a In Palmyra there lived one Taylor, a man of union tendencies, but obnoxious to both northern and southern men in the place because of his low standard of morality. He made a practice of spying upon his neighbors and reporting to the guerrillas of like belief. Many were the horses selzed and men taken prisoners at his instigation, so that even the children avoided him, and were selzed with fear and trembling if he came near. This state of things continued for some time, until, one day, a band of mathern guerrillas came a band of sathern guerrillas came through the little place and captured Taylor. He was never heard of again and the citizens breathed freer, and said "good riddance to bad rubbish."

A band of the northern guerrillas hearing of the incident galloped to the town, and seized as prisoners some of the southerners of the place, declaring that if Taylor were not immediately pro-duced, ten lives should be taken. Con-what were they to do? Taylor could not be produced. They did not know what had become of him. It was supposed he had been killed, and a dead man could not be produced.

Prayers and entreaties availed noth-ing. The men were determined and the people had to submit.

The day following the capture of the men was set for the execution. The whole town was in mourning. Wives and chikiren were weeping over the fate of husbands and fathers, mothers, over their sons, and one young girl mourned for her lover to whom she was

To merely exist was a pleasure. And yet the wife and those little ones! How friendless how unprotected they would be! But why should he? There was no call for him to do it. Turning, he hastily made his way to a chimp of trees where he could be unobserved, and threw himself on the ground. Should he? The thought presented itself again and again. There was no one to miss him. No mother or sisters to grieve if he were to die—none but himself in all the wide world—and yet—and yet. Life was a fair. Visious of the future rose before him. HE WAS HONORABLE.

Confederate Soldier's Strict Adher-ence to the Truth. During the three days in July, 1804, when ten. Hunter occupied Lexington, Va., with a victorious army, the wom-en and children left in town suffered much—in anticipation. They had not seen a "Yankee," a correspondent writes, during the whole war, and in their breated imaginations the 'hoofs and horns' had grown and grown. It was an intense surprise, therefore, to one family at least to find that the pri-vate assigned as their guard was as kind and friendly as if he had worn the gray. He was a plain, uncouth fellow, with the heart of a true knight, toyal and chivalrous. When the inevitable "searching" began, the ladies qualled at the thought of rude men tramping through their private apartments, and the kind guard came to their relief.

"If you give me your word you ain't got nothing contraband," he said, "I'll keep'em off."

They brought out anifold musket, a rusty sword, an invalid pistol—that was all.

rusty sword, an invalid pistol—that was all.

They gave him their word they had nothing elle, and by some influence, perhaps the mere weight of good character and a good record, he "bluffed" the searching party and drove them off. Hardly had the searchers gone when one of the ladies turned to the others with dismay. "The cadet coats!"

Alas, there were half a dozen trunks in the loft filled with clothing belonging to the boy-cadets of the Virginia military institute. In the rash and excitement of getting away before Hunter crossed the river, these young soldiers crossed the river, these young soldiers-to-be of the confederacy had begged for a hiding-place for their duds, and there they were.

If the mistress of the house had remembered them she would have sub-mitted to the search on the chance of keeping them hid; but now her honor was at stake, and the safety, perhaps of her good, kind guard.

He looked very much vexed, and even alarmed, when they told him of their trouble, and for a moment he seemed to ropent that he had been so easily persuaded.
